A Stormy Day on My Way Home

Last week, there was a typhoon. I was on my way home from school. I ran to the bus stop and waited in the queue. I didn't have an umbrella so I used my school bag to cover myself.

After a while, the bus arrived. I got on the bus as fast as lightning and wanted to go back home quickly. Suddenly the bus stopped and the driver said, 'Sorry, you all have to get off the bus because a tree has fallen and blocked the road.'

I got off the bus and ran back home. But the rain was too heavy, and I fell on the ground. I hurt my knee and I couldn't run anymore. Luckily, my friend was next to me. He helped me up and walked back home with me.

In the end, I arrived home thirty minutes later than usual. Mum was very worried when she saw me because I was soaked and my knee was bleeding. She took me to the bathroom and asked me to take a bath. She also helped me to clean the wound.

That day, I learned an important lesson: I should always bring an umbrella with me, especially during typhoon season.
